The ETRS was introduced by Zenza Bronica in early 1979 I believe as the replacement to the ETR. It as standard takes 120 roll film and creates a 6×4.5cm image, allowing you to get 15 shots per roll. That’s landscape format, not portrait.
The Bronica ETRS is essentially the same as the earlier ETR but Bronica added electrical contacts to the viewfinder to use the AE-II and AE-III metered finders, and they also added a two-position shutter release lock.

The shutter is an electronically controlled Seiko leaf shutter in the lens, with a choice of 8, 4, 2 and 1 seconds, and 1/2, 1/4, 1/8th, 1/15th, 1/30th, 1/60th, 1/125th, 1/250th and 1/500th of a second. If the little 6-volt battery inside (A PX28A, or 4LR44) goes dead, it will also mechanically shoot at a standard 1/500th.

This lot doesn't contain batteries. the camera is equipped with the viewfinder and also the darkslide.
