ONE OF THE FIRST NATURAL HISTORY WORK ABOUT MOLLUSCS, SHELLS, OCTOPUSES, SQUIDS, NAUTILUSES, CONCHOLOGY, MARINE ANIMALS AND SEA MONSTERS. "Histoire Naturelle, Ge?ne?rale et Particuliere des Mollusques" (Natural History, General and Particular of Molluscs) by Pierre Denys de MONTFORT (1766–1820). SIX (6) volumes, complete first edition (1802-1805), and beautifully illustrated with 72 detailed copper engravings by the best French illustrators of the time. Among the illustrated species there is also the famous Kraken (Colossal Octopus) mythological animal that was the nightmare of sailors of the time, and Scandinavian legends said it had a reputation for bringing down ships, as illustrated in the famous engraving of this rare edition.

"Le Poulpe Colossal" it was drawn in 1801 by Pierre Dénys de Montfort and engraved by Étienne Claude Voysard, from the descriptions of French sailors reportedly attacked by such a creature off the coast of Angola in Africa. Other authors who collaborated and completed this first edition were Fe?lix de Roissy (1771-1843) and Charles Sigisbert Sonnini (1751-1812). The work is the continuation and extension of "Histoire Naturelle" by Georges Louis Leclerc, comte de Buffon, (1707-1788). The paper is in good condition, the beautiful illustrations were drawn by Denys de MONTFORT and Jacques de Sève (c. 1742-1788); etchers include Hubert, Duhamel, and Berthault, among others. The antique full leather hardcovers are solid, clean and in good condition.

Author: Pierre Dénys de Montfort was a French naturalist (notably malacologist), born in Dunkirk on June 17, 1766 and died in Paris in 1820. He is known for having published his Systematic Conchliology, a work marking an important step in the taxonomy of univalve molluscs; as well as for investigating the stories about the Kraken and the "Colossal Octopus", premises for the description of the giant squid. Montfort argued that the Kraken-Octopus, was described by Norwegian sailors and American whalers as well as ancient writers like Pliny the Elder.
